To OPINE. v. n. [from opinari, Latin.] To think; to judge; to be of opinion.

Fear is an ague, that forsakes And haunts by fits those whom it takes; And they'll opine they feel the pain And blows they felt to-day, again. Hudibras, p. i.

In matters of mere speculation, it is not much material to the welfare of government, or of themselves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philosophers or no. South's Sermon.

But I, who think more highly of our kind, Opine, that nature, as in duty bound, Deep hid the shining mischief under ground. Pope.

OPINATIVE. adj. [from opinari.]

1. Stiff in a preconceived notion.

2. Imagined; not proved.

It is the more difficult to find out truth, because it is in such inconsiderable proportions scattered in a mass of opinitive uncertainties; like the silver in Hiero's crown of gold. Glauv. Scetf. c. 9.

OPINIA'TOR. n. f. [from opiniatus, French.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opinators and self-believing men dispute of and make doubt of? Raleigh.

Eliza left lord Roberts governor; a man of a four and forty nature, a great opinatory, and one who must be overcome before he would believe that he could be so. Clarendon.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all such political opinators should. South's Sermon.

OPINATRE. adj. [French.] Obstinate; stubborn.

Instead of an able man, you desire to have him an insignificant wrangler, opiniatre in discourse, and priding himself in contradicting others. Locke.

The one sets the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry. Locke's Education.

So much as we ourselves consider and comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, make us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true: what in them was science, is in us but opiniatry. Locke.

I can pass by opiniatry and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing. Woodw. Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatry in leaving me; but he shall not get rid so. Pope.

OPINION. n. f. [from opinion, Fr. opinio, Lat.]

1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge. Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben. Johnson.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Stiff in opinion, ever in the wrong. Dryden.

Bleed be the princes who have fought For pompous names, or wide dominion, Since by their error we are taught, That happiness is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion. Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here. South.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South's Sermons.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philosophers are of opinion, that infinite space is possessed by God's infinite omnipotence. Locke.

I shall conclude my paper with a story out of Boccacini, which sufficiently shews us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the sort of critics I have been here mentioning. Addison's Spectator, No. 291.

OPO

3. Favourable judgment. In actions of arms small matters are of great moment, especially when they serve to raise an opinion of commanders. Hayward.

Howsoever I have no opinion of those things; yet so much I conceive to be true, that strong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon.

To OPINION. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The stoicks opinioned the souls of wise men dwell about the moon, and those fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicureans held that death was nothing, nor after death: Brown's V. Err.

That the soul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, is generally opinioned. Glauv. Scetf. c. xiii.

It is opinioned, that the earth rests as the world's centre; while the heavens are the subject of the universal motions. Glauv. Scetf. c. xi.

OPINIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion.] Fond of preconceived notions; stubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative assurance, would be no hindrance to the world's improvement. Glauv.

One would rather chuse a reader without art, than one ill instructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgment. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

OPIPAROUS. adj. [from opiparus, Lat.] Sumptuous. Diä.

OPIMUM. n. f. A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or masses, usually of a roundish figure, very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is very unpleasant, of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid. It is brought from Natolia, from Egypt, and from the East-Indies, where it is produced from the white garden poppy; a plant of which every part is full of a milky juice, and with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown as ours are with corn. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid consistence. These drops are gathered with great care, and the finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. In the countries where opium is produced, multitudes are employed in preparing it with water, honey and spices, and working it up into cakes; but what we generally have is the mere crude juice, or at most worked up with water, or a small quantity of honey sufficient to bring it into form. The ancients were greatly divided about the virtues and use of opium; some calling it a poison, and others the greatest of all medicines. At present it is in high esteem, and externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram as a moderate dose; but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful, as if he had drank moderately of wine; it removes melancholy, excites boldness, and dissipates the dread of danger; and for this reason the Turks always take it when they are going to battle in a larger dose than ordinary: it afterward quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect of a dose of opium is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits, which had been elevated by it, become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on a sort of drunkenness, cheerfulness and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium, are subject to relaxations and weaknesses of all the parts of the body; they are apt to be faint, idle and thoughtless, and are generally in a stupid and uncomfortable state, except just after they have taken a fresh dose: they lose their appetite, and in fine grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forsook and giv'n me o'er To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milton.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

OPIE-TREE. n. f. [from opie and tree.] A sort of tree. Ainsl.

OPOBALSAMUM. n. f. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPOPONAX. n. f. [Latin.] A gum resin of a tolerably firm texture, in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, which are impure. It is of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taste. It is brought to us from
